

A Debt of Gratitude

The majority of papers published this year in the Proceedings of the Indian Academy of Sciences (Earth and Planetary Sciences) were accepted after considerable revision. This involved painstaking reviews by referees without which it would have been impossible to maintain the quality of the journal.

Equally gratifying has been the response of authors who greatly valued reviewer's criticisms that helped improve their papers. These outstanding services provided by referees and the time and effort spent by them made a most critical contribution in maintaining editorial standards—a debt which is warmly acknowledged.
